

NICK'S NEW HEART

LESSONS LEARNED

- Andy and I learned that we handle stress differently. We each have our niche, and it takes us both to hold our lives together.
- We each have our own interests, making sure our whole world does not revolve around Nick.
- Although, we approach issues differently, we are united. We see ourselves as doing what needs to be done in order for Nick to live and have the best life possible.
- To survive we need some control over the situation, and input into the decisions about Nick's care. We treat each problem as a challenge, see life as an adventure, and are committed to doing the best we can for Nick and our family.