

Finding the Correct Writers' Conference for You

Copyright@2006

Conferences can be an invaluable tool in a writer's life but not every conference is created equal. A writer needs to concentrate on attending conferences that help him or her to meet their personal writing goals. This workshop presents practical guidelines on how to determine which conference best suits the writer's needs. Determination is based on the workshops presented, editor/agent availability, genre of the conference, and cost to attend. The presentation includes how to get the most out of a conference, what to do while attending a conference, how to apply that knowledge, and what the writer should do after the conference will be shared.

Attendees will take away:

- How to find conferences that are right for you
- How to judge the value of a conference
- Planning for a conference
